Show Apprecation of the Act-

One of the largest gatherings of the bilind ever assembled "saw" a performance of "The Great Adventure" at the Town Hall yesterday afternoon. More than 1,000 sightless men and women from New York. Brooklyn and Jersey City exhibited thorough appreciation of the acting of the Neighborhood Players in Arnold Bennett's fantastic comedy, and those in charge of this first test performance for the afflicted considered it a substantial success.

The play had first been enjoyed at the Neighborhood Playhouse by two wealthy the death at Pau, France, Tuesday of of the most extrordinary audiences ever gathered together, they said they were not conscious of anything exceptional, because those in the auditorium were so responsive. They failed, of course, to catch any bit of comedy business, but they laughed heartly at all the witty sailes. It was noticed, in fact, that they were more sensitive to humorous inflections of voice and laughed more quickly than an ordinary audience, not being diverted by watching the motions of the players. In view of the success and the players. In view of the success and the ease and simplicity with which the performance could be put on, it is expected that other plays relying largely on dialogue will be done for the blind at special presentations.

DIED.

The play had first been enjoyed at the Neighborhood Playhouse by two wealthy blind men, who said they liked it better than anything they had "seen" this season because it depended primarily on dialogue instead of physical action. Their praise of it induced the editor of the Zeigler Blind Magazine to arrange yesterday's matinee. About 406 guides were provided for the patrons, and they had programmes printed in two systems, the Braille and the New York point type.

The company changed to their stage costumes and used most of their regular properties, but had no scenery. To let the audience know when the acts began a gong was struck three times and twice when it was over. Before each act an announcer explained the setting to the blind, so they could picture it in their minds.
